

The Ethics of Healthcare Organizations as Stewards of Their Communities

A program of ACE's Fund for Innovation in Healthcare Leadership on August 5

Fierce competition, conflicting needs and too few resources continue to strain the ethical resolve of even the strongest of healthcare leaders. These result in tough questions and high-stakes challenges.

This insightful half-day seminar exposes healthcare executives to the challenges and some very practical solutions to the ethical dilemmas they encounter. Explore your role in:

- Setting the ethical course for your organization
- Reflecting the culture in your policies, practices and budgets
- Keeping your promises in the face of significant financial challenge(s)
- Applying a nonprofit ethic to charity care and unprofitable services

Laurence B. McCullough, PhD, the Dalton Tomlin Chair in Medical Ethics and Health Policy at Baylor College of Medicine, will lead this workshop using short lectures, leadership vignettes and highly interactive small-group exercises.

Experienced healthcare leaders will share their familiarity with ethical challenges while serving as discussion leaders on topics such as organization transparency, managing conflicts of interest and an ethical approach to disruptive behavior.

If you are already attending the New York Cluster, stay for another half-day to enhance your professional growth with this important session. Or participate in the morning ethics program and leave with a renewed sense of commitment.
